Cards against Humanity Jungschar Version

The classic game Cards against Humanity with its black humor is available in all possible variations. Now also available in a youngsters' version and a little more suitable for children.

Cards against Humanity is a well-known card game from the USA. The principle of the game is as simple as it is ingenious: draw a question on a card and all other players place an answer to this question from their hand. Games such as Kampf gegen das Bünzlitum have been inspired by it.

And now this game is available in an "official" Jungschar version. Based on the original, it is called "Charte gäge Jungschärler". With questions and terms that are suitable for children, but with the same game principle as Cards against Humanity. The game can be played well with older Jungschar children, teenagers or among leaders.

The questions and terms are formulated in Swiss German. The blank blue pages next to the questions are for printing on both sides of the question cards. They can then be identified as questions even when they are covered.

Do it yourself

Can you think of any other terms or questions? Then write them down yourself to play with them. Either by hand or digitally. If you use the Word template provided, you can then export your questions and terms as a PDF and attach them to this article.

Have I forgotten any very, very important terms? Or are there questions missing that are specific to your Jungschar association? Then write to me at noah.stadler [at] fresh-schinznach.ch (noah[dot]stadler[at]fresh-schinznach[dot]ch) and I will add the terms in the "official" version.

The game is available under the Creative Commons license and may be reproduced and modified as desired, provided the original and the author are named. Project files can be requested under the above mentioned mail. Photo provided by Winnetou, Jungschar Fresh Schinznach.
